Description

A collection of major American critic Bruce F. Kawin's most engaging and important essays on film, accompanied by his interviews with Lillian Gish and Howard Hawks.

'Readers who care sincerely about movies will learn from and be challenged by the work of Bruce Kawin.' Roger Ebert

'The way in which the volume situates Faulkner and Foote in – even surrounds them with – such groundbreaking film scholarship productively skews more conventional accounts of these writers [...] [Scholars] would do well to heed Kawin's plea to 'get it right,' to 'stand up for accuracy.' I can think of no better model in this pursuit than his Selected Film Essays and Interviews.' –Sarah Gleeson-White, Mississippi Quarterly

A collection of Bruce F. Kawin's most engaging and important essays on film, accompanied by his interviews with Lillian Gish and Howard Hawks.

Readership: General readers, scholars and educators alike who are interested in film and film theory at any level, including film from the 1960s to the present, especially American, discussions of movie violence, the relations between literature and film, the battle between film and video, Faulkner and narrative theory, and narrative theory in general. The book will also appeal to feminist film scholars who will appreciate the book's absence of sexism, particularly when sex and violence are being discussed, educators and students wanting a model of clear yet complex writing about film, and those familiar with Kawin's work.
