A study of the similarities between the autobiographies of warrior tribes and of street gangs.

“This book is an invaluable contribution to understanding how violence can be valued across dramatically different cultures. The originality of comparing warrior tribes and street gangs is brilliant, revealing deeply insightful perspectives on our species. David Brumble has produced a beautiful and disturbing narrative that every curious person should read.”

—Daniel L. Everett, Trustee Professor of Cognitive Sciences, Bentley University, USA

‘Street-Gang and Tribal-Warrior Autobiographies’ describes the similarities between the autobiographies of warrior tribes and of street gangs. Gangbangers were so alienated from the larger society that they reinvented something very similar to tribal-warrior cultures right in the heart of American cities.
