A study of the underlying dynamics of energy siting across resources and kinds of energy.

“Land-based energy projects can often lead to conflicts resulting from an uneven distribution of costs and benefits. Resolving Land and Energy Conflicts addresses the full range of potential land-use conflicts accompanying energy projects with a set of practice-tested tools capable of providing shared gains through collaboration and dispute resolution.” —Armando Carbonell, Chair, Department of Planning and Urban Form, Lincoln Institute of Land Policy, USA

"Energy in the Landscape provides vital insight on some of the most vexing siting issues around renewable power and other key energy infrastructure—important reading to help shorten the path toward the next generation of energy."—Ian Bowles, Managing Director, WindSail Capital

The book does an incredible job of distilling complex land use conflicts associated with energy production into succinct summaries and well-formulated recommendations that are ready to be picked up by any conflict resolution professional working in land use planning and/or energy facility siting.—Alex Renirie and Todd Jarvis, Mediate

Based on decades of experience in addressing energy-siting conflicts, the authors of ‘Resolving Land and Energy Conflicts’ provide details of a host of tools, strategies and principles for tackling them.
