Discusses about the existential challenges faced by persons ageing and dying and demonstrates the significance of the virtues and communal life for navigating them.

For those captive to the broken world of late modernity, wherein ageing and dying persons become vulnerable to despair, this book not only offers a diagnostic of such despair but also resources the practices of a realistic, humanising hope that might enable a strength for person to journey with and for others, together, through such despair, now liberated to become hopeful wayfarers in living and dying.

Readership

Academic and informed lay person; undergraduates and post-graduate students and scholars in the field.

Key selling points

- Offers a timely discussion about the existential challenges faced by persons ageing and dying
- As a project in moral theology, this book demonstrates the significance of the virtues and communal life for navigating both ageing and dying
- Introduces an approach to interdisciplinary scholarship at the intersection of health studies/medicine and theology.
