“DePoy and Gilson delve into what it means to be human, with constructs of disability underpinning their work. Building on earlier thinking and publications they continue probing disability, humanity, and their intersections. Readers are invited to join their journey through humanness literacy, an ‘expansive revision’ imagining of ‘all bodies.’” — Steven E. Brown, Retired Professor Disability Studies, University of Hawaii Center on Disability Studies, US; Co-Founder, Institute on Disability Culture.

“Emerging Thoughts in Disability and Humanness introduces, defines and uses multiple theories to map the current ground of disability theory and the presentation of embodied life in a culture. It is focused on the purpose of theorizing to aid in successfully resolving barriers to develop practically embedded and participatory living for all bodies.” —Heather MacDuffie, Licensed Clinical Social Worker

Emerging Thoughts in Disability and Humanness engages with fundamental questions about the legitimacy of the atypical body for membership, quasi-membership or exclusion from the category of human.
